The only thing that man does not have is the peace of mind. A person ruins his health in want to wealth in the first half of his life and in the second half he ruins his wealth in the want of health. Many a times it so happens that at the end time he is devoid of both health and wealth. If man had everything he would have become the master of the Universe, but his restlessness does not allow him to do so. There is one such thing that every person is in a want for, but he almost fails to identify it and that is the peace of mind.

Questions:

(i) What is the thing that man does not have?
(ii) What does a person ruin in the first half of his life?
(iii) If man had everything what would he have become?
(iv) What is the thing that every person wants?
(v) Give a suitable title to the passage.
